Xbox Live plus Hulu on E3 in less than two weeks? This is the latest pre-E3 game-a-palooza rumor that Microsoft plans to announce Hulu support for Xbox Live during its press conference at the show on Monday, June 14. The tech website Gear Live, which carries the water for a very reliable source, claims that the Xbox 360 - not Apple's iPad - is launching a subscription-based payment model for the web-based, commercially supported streaming TV and movie service. Of course, the iPad doesn't support Flash, Hulu's native video encapsulation method, so I'm not sure how significant the coup is. In addition, services such as MediaMalls PlayOn have been supporting Hulu playback through Xbox 360, PS3, and Wii since August 2008. If the rumor is true, Hulu would theoretically be in touch with Netflix, which already channels on-demand TV and video streaming on Microsoft's console. Competition, that is, unless the Hulu deal was limited to specific, non-overlapping programming. Does native Hulu support a dealmaker for each of you, or are you happy with Netflix? Will adding services like Hulu to Xbox Live force others like Netflix to offer more competitive pricing plans? If you're a PS3 owner, will Microsoft's (rumored) lead now be smashed by Microsoft's (rumored) lead for a service like PlayOn? Follow me on Twitter (@game_on) In today's live TV streaming market, viewers are overwhelmed with options. Not only independent cable alternatives, but also cable companies themselves compete to be the primary option for cable cutters. We've looked at all the options for live TV streaming in one overview before. This series now takes each service head-on against each other to allow viewers to make more direct comparisons. In 2016, AT&T launched DirecTV Now as an alternative to its more traditional cable service, DirecTV, which allows subscribers to stream cable channels without obligation. With multiple packet levels, subscribers can choose to access 45 to 125 channels available through online and mobile apps. To compete with the growing demand for live streaming cable (and local) network options without cable binding, the popular on-demand streaming service Hulu has added Hulu Live TV in 2017. The advanced service option gives viewers access to more than 65 cable channels and on-premises network access, as well as cloud DVR capabilities. Price comparison When it comes to price, Hulu Live TV is the better deal. Starting at $4.99 per month for standard Hulu + Live TV (or USD 50.99 for free advertising on Hulu on-demand shows) with 65 basic channels included, it offers more options for less than DirecTV Now. It also includes a 7-day free DirecTV Now's cheapest package starts at USD 50, after the same free trial period of 7 days, but has only 45 channels in this package – although it includes HBO. For customers looking for more channel options, there are a total of six main packages, which can cost up to USD 135 per month for the Package spanning 125 channels. Streaming and DVR features DirecTV Now can't quite walk with Hulu Live TV when it comes to streaming features. Yes, both services come with the ability to stream on two screens at the same time, and DirecTV Now is slightly cheaper to update, offering an increase to three screens for 5 dollars more per month. However, Hulu's live TV goes from two screens unlimited for an additional 9.99 dollars per month. When it comes to DVR options, Hulu Live TV is way ahead of DirecTV Now, which only recently added Cloud DVR, and is currently limited to 20 hours of free storage (and only lasts up to 30 days). Hulu Live TV offers a cloud DVR with up to 50 hours of recorded storage, which can be increased to 200 hours (9.99 USD) with the Enhanced Cloud DVR add-on. Or, for a monthly price of USD 14.99, subscribers can combine the Enhanced Cloud DVR and unlimited screen features. Cable channel comparison In advance, DirecTV Now looks like it has more cable channel options, with packets from 45 to 125 channels. On closer inspection, however, the selection is not great. When comparing packages, the plus and Max options do not include many of the very popular cable networks, including BBC America, AMC, A&E, History and Food Network. Subscribers must jump to the 93-dollar package to receive it. And the free bonus rewards, which are part of the first two lower tiers, are not included at the higher price points. While Hulu Live TV misses some of the more popular options – most notable BBC America, Comedy Central and AMC – they have a much wider range of networks in their 65-channel package. While Hulu lacks roughly the same number of leading base cable networks, the total quantity and quality for the price balance are in Hulu's favor. Local television While regional access may vary, and it is important to check your own area before making a final choice, and in theory, both Hulu Live TV and DirecTV Now offer local networks live streaming. Each website has a place to look up your region and see which of the most important networks it has. Both have partnerships with ABC, CBS, Fox and NBC, as well as CW in some regions. For example, you can get the big four on both services in Baltimore, Maryland, but not the CW with Hulu, which you can get with DirecTV Now. Hulu, however, appears to have a more solid and broader range of markets. It should be noted that at the time of this letter (July 2019) many ABC, CBS, FOX and NBC member channels in selected regions were recently unavailable on DirecTV Now. The parent company of the provider AT&T and the telecommunications group Nextstar, which distributes local networks in many regions, are in dispute over fees. Premium Channels and Sports With Services are access to premiums usually a la carte. DirecTV Now offers rewards included in the first two tiers, starting with HBO with Plus (50 USD) and HBO and Cinemax on Max (70 USD). The higher level with simpler cable channels have no built-in rewards, so you can add them for 11 USD per month. Rewards that can be added (if not included) include HBO, Cinemax, Starz and Showtime. Hulu has the option to add on each of the same for rewards, although the prices are more variable, according to the way to get the services from the network directly. HBO is 14.99 dollars, Cinemax is 9.99 dollars, Starz is 8.99 dollars and Showtime is 10.99 dollars. Hulu Live TV has more sports options than DirecTV Now, with several more ESPN channels, FS2, golf and Olympic channels and more that are not part of the same price base level of DirecTV Now. Device compatibility and user interface Here you will find a brief summary of all devices listed as compatible with each service. DirecTV Now is limited to its compatibility options: Hulu: Mac & PC ComputerRoku (selected models)* Apple TV (4th generation)* Apple/IOS devicesAndroid phones and tabletsAmazon Fire TV and stickcastXbox (One & 360)Samsung & LG smart TVsNintendo Switch Xiaomi Mi box DirecTV Now: Mac & PC Computer – Specifically Chrome and Safari BrowserRoku (selected models)* Apple TV (4th generation or later)Apple/IOS devicesAndroid phones and tabletsAmazon Fire TV and stickChromecastSamsung Smart TVs No matter which service you lean towards, it is always best to look into the device model of your preferred streaming device and check the detailed compatibility specifications. Many older models Roku and Apple TVs, for example, are not compatible with all newer streaming services. Summary While certain combinations of channels or the well-known title of DirecTV hold something, in almost every category the range of options and the value for money makes Hulu Live TV a more solid selection. In addition to their unique original programming, they have a better understanding of the streaming market. Meanwhile, DirecTV Now still seems to be thinking about the big price tag and complicated packages of the old cable model, albeit without cables.
